Things to Look for in a Good Speech

The introduction should grab the attention of the audience and create interest in the rest of the speech. The introduction should include a thesis statement and should preview the main points. The flow of thoughts should be smooth and natural, building to a conclusive end. Multiple sources should be used and properly cited throughout the development of the speech. The conclusion should summarize the speech and provide closure to the presentation.

Violations to Watch For

- Use of a script, notes, or prompting will result in a two-rank violation
- Lack of proper citations
- Exceeding the time limit will result in a one-rank violation

Please note: Plagiarism is prohibited. If a judge has concerns about proper attribution but is uncertain whether source citation is lacking, the judge should notify the Tournament Director upon completion of the round.
